

A Guide to the JSGE Research Fellowship Program Award in 2017

Description

This program is designed to annually invite three or four promising young gastroenterologists from countries in Asia for three to five-month fellowships at teaching hospitals in Japan. The Japanese Society of Gastroenterology (JSGE) will make the final selection of the three or four fellows from among the applicants recommended by Asian national or regional gastroenterological societies.

Objective

The overall objective is to foster closer cooperation among Asian gastroenterologists while advancing knowledge and skills in gastroenterology by providing training opportunities in Japan to promising young Asian gastroenterologists.

Period and location of training

- Period: The length of the training period is 3 months at least and 5 months at longest. (4 months training is also selectable)
The training end day is fixed at the end of November.
The participants can choose the start date from among three choices at their convenience. (Start date will be July 1st or August 1st or September 1st)
(After finishing the program, a short report of less than 200-300 words will be required)
- Location: Teaching hospitals selected by the JSGE, taking into account the participant's needs and desires regarding the content of training.

Eligibility

- Applicants must be legally qualified to practice medicine.
- Applicants must be 37 years of age or under as of December 31, in the year of application.
- Applicants must have a documented practical level of proficiency in the English language.

One of the following certificates of proficiency in English is required.

- i TOEFL (scores of PBT 510 ,iBT 64, CBT 180 and above)
- ii TOEIC (scores of 615 and above)
- v Passers of ECFMG (Educational Communication for Foreign Medical Graduates)

- vi Passers of FMGEMS (Foreign Medical Graduate Examination in Medical Sciences)
- vii Certification issued by a public agency proving that the applicant has passed a medical practitioner's examination in English
- viii Diploma or certificate of degree from a school of medicine in which courses are conducted in English

- Applicants will be notified the result of the review by the end of December, 2016, and successful applicants will be required to complete visa procedures before the starting date of this program.
- Applicants must be confident and capable of benefiting greatly from training under this program with a view to advancing their career in gastroenterology and becoming part of their national leadership in this specialty.

Support

The applicants finally selected to participate in the program by the JSGE will be provided with the following :

- Economy-class round trip airfare between their home countries and Japan
- Cost or in-kind allowance for necessary domestic travel and commuting within Japan
- Rent or in-kind allowance for accommodation for the duration of training (single university or hospital employee room- or visitor room-type, or equivalent)
- Cash payment of 90,000 (ninety thousand) Japanese yen per month as a living allowance
- Cost or in-kind allowance for participation in Japan Digestive Disease Week 2017 in Fukuoka (to cover the registration fee, round trip from the place of training, and accommodation).
- Travel insurance for accidents and sickness during the training period

Other Considerations

- A practical level of capability to communicate in the Japanese language will be regarded as advantageous.
- No support, other than the above-mentioned, will be provided. Any accompanying person or relatives brought by a fellow, are purely the responsibility, in terms of both immigration and finance, of the fellow. The JSGE will not arrange for air tickets, domestic travel, and housing. Support from the JSGE is exclusively for the fellow.

- Due to strict legal regulations governing the medical licensing system in Japan, applicants are advised to be aware that it is impossible for a foreign medical trainee without a Japanese medical license to have an opportunity to perform direct medical practice on patients in Japan. However, we will support your application for Advanced Clinical Training (ACT) which allows you to do clinical training once you are granted an ACT permit. Please note that the application procedure by the Japanese government (Ministry of Health, Labor and Welfare) usually takes a couple of months and the application process can only be initiated after your arrival. For these reasons, it may not be granted during your stay.

Documents required for Advanced Clinical Training application are listed separately.

- This guide may be downloaded together with the attached application form to a potential applicant's personal computer (PC) either from the JSGE website or the appropriate national or regional gastroenterological society. Applicants should fill in the form on the PC, and then print out the completed form on A4-size sheets, or alternatively print out the blank application form, and then type entries on the form. Whichever method is employed, the application form must be signed by hand by the applicant, and sent by postal or courier service to his/her national or regional gastroenterological society which should then endorse and forward the application to the JSGE.
- During the training period, applicants will not be permitted to suspend or shorten the training.

Warning: Applications sent directly to the JSGE will be disqualified and disposed of, without being forwarded to the gastroenterological society of the applicant.
